WELCOME TO WKND

JOHN OPPERMANN, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF EARTH DAY INITIATIVE

In the last couple of years, we have seen a significant uptick in the engagement of millions of people hoping to move things in a positive direction on a wide range of issues. We're living in an activist age. People are seeking out ways to make a positive impact in their own lives. On the environmental front, there is plenty to do. When basic environmental protections we have taken for granted for decades are degraded, it is up to individuals to take things into their own hands. Clifton Collins Jr. talks 'Westworld' Season 2, fanboying over Ed Harris

The bromance is real between Lawrence and the Man in Black. MATT JUUL

"Westworld" Season 2 debuts on Sunday at 9 p.m. on HBO.
ALL PHOTOS BY JOHN P. JOHNSON / HBO

Don't mess with Lawrence.

The hosts are ready to take over the park when "Westworld" returns for Season 2 on Sunday.

Clifton Collins Jr., the man behind the android Lawrence, is just as pumped as the fans to see the show back on HBO. Although the actor couldn't spill too much about the new season, he's excited to see Lawrence continue his journey of self-discovery, a situation that the rests of the hosts — and even humans — also find themselves in.

"There's an overall coming of consciousness, which I think is really important. It's part of the theme," Collins tells Metro. "It's very relevant to the issues that are happening today too with people awakening to what's really happening. Great art reflects our social times."

Collins believes that the show parallels America's political climate in a lot of ways, particularly when it comes to the lack of empathy many well-to-do people have towards their struggling neighbors, and the danger of living in a system that lacks "checks and balances."

"When people have unchecked power, there are some really banana things that end up happening, in our country in particular," Collins says. "It's unbelievable. I don't even know what to say. I have more clarity in the confusion of 'Westworld' than I do in what's happening within our own country at this moment."

While "Westworld" seems to mirror the real world in several terrifying ways, Collins admits that the show does reflect some of the positive changes that are happening in society, especially when it comes to efforts to celebrate diversity. The actor praises the producers and showrunners for their willingness to cast talent from such a wide range of cultures and backgrounds, an issue that's close to his heart.

Collins' grandfather Pedro Gonzalez Gonzalez helped open the doors for Mexican actors in Hollywood, having appeared in numerous films opposite John Wayne. Collins pays homage to his grandfather on "Westworld" by wearing the same gun belt Gonzalez Gonzalez wore in the 1959 Western "Rio Bravo."

From George Lopez to Danny Trejo, many stars have told Collins that his grandfather influenced them to get into show business. The actor, of course, credits Gonzalez Gonzalez for inspiring him to pursue his dreams in Hollywood as well.

"He was the one voice that told me I could do it," Collins says.

Another inspiration for Collins has been his "Westworld" co-star Ed Harris, who plays William, the mysterious Man in Black. Collins worked hard to gain Harris' respect during the first season and is honored to have "found a great mentorship" in the acting icon.

"I try to not fanboy out, but sometimes you can't contain yourself."

Like their characters on the show, the duo have become friends in real life too, although Collins admits he's still a bit of fanboy for Harris.

"We're so blessed to be in a business where we get to become friends with people we're also fans of," Collins says. "I try to not fanboy out, but sometimes you can't contain yourself."

Fans can expect Lawrence and William to reunite for more adventures in Season 2.

HOST or HUMAN

Need a refresh of the characters in the land of "Westworld"? If you're not sure who's who, here's a guide to the most important hosts and humans in Sweetwater and beyond. RACHAEL VAUGHAN CLEMMONS

Dolores
One of Westworld's first hosts who has realized the true nature of the park. Also known by her bloodthirsty alter-ego, Wyatt.

Teddy
A handsome transient who does a bit of gunslinging, but mostly longs for a simpler life — with Dolores at the center.

Bernard
Programmer and Head of Behavior at Westworld who was revealed to be a host made in Arnold's image.

Maeve
Former madam at Mariposa. In Season 2, she travels through the park in search of her daughter.

Hector
The head of a gang of dangerous outlaws who appears to be enamored with Maeve — despite his coding.

Dr. Ford
The now-dead creator of the park who is responsible for all this mess, frankly.

Charlotte
The executive director of Delos, intent on getting the park back on track.

Arnold
The long-gone Arnold was the co-creator of the park — he often appears in flashbacks and had a close relationship with Dolores.

Lee
The head writer and — pardon our French — resident a—hole of Westworld, Lee is responsible for all of the narratives at the park.

The Man in Black

William

A classic bad dude, The Man in Black was revealed to be William in a later timeline last season. He's ready to play Ford's game, and he'll go to great lengths to finish it.

‘Super Troopers 2’ cast on uniting cops and stoners, Rob Lowe’s raunchy scene

The Broken Lizard comedy troupe explains why this is the sequel America needs.

MATT JUUL

Get your liter of cola ready because the boys are back, meow. ALL PHOTOS BY JON PACK / TWENTIETH CENTURY FOX

Police officers and pot enthusiasts don’t see eye to eye on a lot of things, but you can expect members of both groups to flock to theaters when “Super Troopers 2” makes its debut this weekend.

Set to open April 20, the sequel to the 2001 comedy reunites audiences with Farva, Rabbit and the rest of the hilarious Vermont state troopers as they venture across the Canadian border for another wacky adventure. While the world has changed a lot since the cult classic original hit the silver screen, the Broken Lizard troupe hopes that the follow-up will once again serve as a unifying force between their diverse fan base.

“Half our fans are cops, the other half are stoners,” Jay Chandrasekhar tells Metro. “We’re kind of hoping people can at least come to this movie and go, ‘OK, at least we can agree on this damn thing.’”

Aside from a quick “Make America Great Again” joke, the “Super Troopers” crew didn’t want to alienate any viewers by going heavy on the Donald Trump jokes, as Chandrasekhar notes that half of their fans happen to be Republican. The actor and director adds that there’s already “so much disunity out there,” and they didn’t want the sequel to contribute to the divisive climate.

“The campaign that Trump ran, ‘Make America Great,’ was a very impactful statement, so we said, ‘Yeah, we’ll keep that one in,’” Chandrasekhar says. “We’ve kind of taken the approach that the purpose of art is to probably unify people.”

“America needs ‘Super Troopers 2,’” Steve Lemme jokes.

Of course, political satire has never been a focus for the series, which is at its best when it highlights the outlandish aspects of life as a law-enforcement member. The sequel takes things up a notch by pitting the Vermont troopers against their Canadian counterparts, poking fun at cliches and culture on both sides of the border.

The Broken Lizard team came up with the idea for “Super Troopers” after spending time with a buddy who lived in a quiet Vermont town that neighbors Canada. They played with the notion of cops who’re forced to patrol a highway where pretty much nothing happens on a daily basis, and how locals find their kicks by exploiting the lax enforcement of laws.

“If we wanted beer, we’d go right across the border,” Erik Stolhanske says. “There wasn’t anybody stopping you or asking for a passport.”

While the original film was shot around New York state, production moved to Massachusetts for the sequel, which only came about after the team raised enough money from 54,000 fans through crowdsourcing efforts. According to Kevin Heffernan, "Super Troopers 2" set up shop in the Bay State in order to take advantage of the "tax benefits."

"We were lucky Massachusetts had that incentive, so we came here," Heffernan says. "We shot a week up by the Quabbin Reservoir for all the road stuff, and then shot right around Boston in Concord, Acton and that area for the rest of the stuff."

As for why they decided to do a "Super Troopers 2," the cast felt like they owed it to all their fans who've watched the first film 50 to 100 times over the years. The key, though, was to not try to top the original, but just create a story that felt like a natural progression for these characters.

"The best that you can do for somebody like that is to try to give them just a continuation of the first movie and not try to out do it or out think the room," Paul Soter says.

"If you loved hanging out with these f—king guys enough to want to sit with them 100 f—king times, then you should just want to feel like you're hanging out with them again."

In addition to the

Rob Lowe isn't afraid to get raunchy.

return of the fan-favorite troopers and stars like Lynda Carter and Jim Gaffigan, "Super Troopers 2" features plenty of new faces, highlighted by Rob Lowe. The actor plays an ex-hockey player who serves as the mayor of a Canadian border town.

"Sitting there in a scene with Rob Lowe is totally surreal," Lemme says. "Especially when the scene is done and your trembling because he's so f—king good looking."

Somehow, the Broken Lizard troupe was able to convince Lowe to do a particularly raunchy scene set inside a strip club involving male appendages. The gag wasn't in the script, but Lowe seemed happy to oblige when the cast made Chandrasekhar spring it on him during filming.

"We kind of bait and switched him," Chandrasekhar says. "I said, 'There was this whole joke about him tugging on a penis.' He said, 'Oh yeah, let's do that!'"

While we won't spoil it here, Lowe put his own spin on the scene, to the delight of everyone on set.

"He had all sorts of fun ideas for that," Chandrasekhar says. "His view was, 'How can you not do that joke once we've talked about it?'"

"These movies work best when you take some risk," he adds. "If it doesn't work, we won't put it in the movie. You have to take a risk and go over the edge a little."

Wanda Sykes explains why 'Roseanne' isn't a pro-Trump show

The comedian opens up about working with Roseanne Barr and catching heat for her jokes about the president. MATT JUUL

Wanda Sykes performs at the Chevalier Theatre on Friday night. ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Wanda Sykes has never been afraid to criticize Donald Trump.

While her fans are more than happy to laugh at her jokes about the president, her jabs drew the ire of some audience members at the 2016 Comics Come Home event. The show turned into quite the controversy as she reportedly flipped off her boo birds in the crowd.

Despite the tough trip last time around, Sykes can't wait to return to New England on Friday for a performance at the Women in Comedy Festival in Boston, followed by a gig at Foxwoods on Saturday. We caught up with Sykes to talk about that rough Comics Come Home appearance and why she decided to work as a consulting producer on "Roseanne."

Are you excited or worried to perform in Boston again?

I'm excited to come back. That wasn't my crowd. I was there as part of a big show. My crowd isn't Nick Di Paolo's crowd. Was I surprised? No. Not at all. Come on, Boston has a reputation too. But, I just know when it's my show, I love the crowds that I get and they're with me, so I have no worries.

Your views don't align with Roseanne Barr's. Why did you decide to work on the revival?

I'm a Roseanne fan. I'm a fan of the show. It saddens me, but it also cracks me up. Extreme anything is nuts. Extreme left is just as nuts as the extreme right. The only way that we're going to patch things up in this country is the people in the middle got to start talking to each other instead of just battling it out on Twitter. "Roseanne" speaks to so many people. They just want to be entertained. It kills me when people say it's a pro-Trump show. Absolutely not. These people are struggling. They're sharing medication. Trump's America, they're still broke as hell. Trump takes credit for everything and we can't control that.

And Roseanne, when my production company brought back "Last Comic Standing" for NBC, they told us you got to get big judges. Roseanne was the first one we reached out to. She was chilling in Hawaii. She met with us and we had dinner, and she's hilarious. I'm a lesbian, my producing partner is a lesbian, and she was like, "I want ya'll to succeed. I want to help you out. I want to win." I mean, Roseanne is just an old lady who shouldn't be on Twitter. She believes everything she reads because, when you're from that generation, you read stuff, you're like, "Well, what do you mean it's not true? I'm reading it!" Look, I accidentally followed Justin Bieber for 30 minutes and it scared the s–t out of me.

Things to do around Boston for 4/20

Here's how to celebrate the high holiday. SHIRLEY WANG

Ever heard of "dabachusetts"? Maybe not, but after this 4/20, Massachusetts might prove it's worthy of the title. While you can't smoke on site at most of these events, here are five things to do around the Boston area in honor of the high holiday.

Cannapalooza

This indoors event is both a showcase of the best gadgets for marijuana-consumption and a chance to dance away a hazy evening. See artists live-painting to music, and chill out to a DJ while enjoying a few drinks. The party is organized by the Boston Cannabis Co., a "cannabis lifestyle brand" that sells shirts and beanies, and is hosted by Kenny Urban, a beatbox soloist who will trip you out with his award-winning flows.
April 20, ONCE Somerville, 156 Highland Ave., Somerville, $20+, thebostoncannabisco.com

I & I Spring Fest

For a different vibe, the company behind "ganja yoga" and "sativa flow" pop-ups around Boston gives weed-loving a homey twist with its weekend-long festival of workshops and cooking classes. Learn how to pair essential oils with high-quality weed, sample homegrown strains, munch on vegan Rasta food and hear more about the spirituality behind this new yoga movement. Don't forget to bring your Mason jars.
April 20 - 22, I & I Rose Garden, 182 Poplar St., Roslindale, $60+, eventbrite.com

Waka Flocka Flame takes over Rogue Lounge on 4/20.

Waka Flocka Flame

Waka Flocka Flame, the rapper who was once a member of 1017 Brick Squad with Gucci Mane, will host a 4/20-themed party at the Rogue Lounge. Flame has a reality TV show in the works called "Meet the Flockas" on VH1, but here's hoping for some off-the-script moments at the show. This night is also the official launch of H420, a marijuana-themed apparel site.
April 20, 9:30 p.m.-2 a.m., Rogue Lounge, 222 Friend St., $20+, rogueboston.com

1st Annual 420 Ganja Galla

The Ganja Galla kicks off the holiday early this weekend with a 30+ vendor exhibition and art show, plus a show from space funk band Merther. It's run by the 13 Folds Magazine, a cannabis-centered publication that will release its next issue at the event. You can also snag VIP tickets for cocktails and a munchies pre-party.
April 20, 4 p.m.-12 a.m., Worcester Lodge of Elks, 233 Mill St., Worcester, $10+, potguide.com

4/20 Paint and Smoke Party

Because it takes place on a residential property (read: private), you can actually smoke recreationally at this event. It's a BYOC (bring your own cannabis) evening with free edibles and plenty of opportunities for expression: Local artist Frandy Suero will lead a painting class, and guests can share stories during the open mic.
April 20, 4:30 p.m. - 10 p.m., 420 Haus, 11 Seaverns Ave., Jamaica Plain, free, potguide.com

3 Ways to celebrate Earth Day 2018 in Boston

Party for the planet this weekend.

MATT JUUL

As Boston and the rest the world continue to look for solutions to combat the effects of climate change, Earth Day couldn't be more important this year. Here are a few ways to celebrate the eco-holiday around town when it returns this weekend.

Agricultural Festival
The Boston Public Market is hosting its first ever Agricultural Festival just in time for Earth Day on Sunday. The free fest will celebrate the holiday as well as the beginning of the spring growing season with a variety of events geared towards all ages. Highlights include pop-up vendors, face painting, a baby chicks "meet and greet," cider pressing, do-it-yourself flower crowns, composting workshops and more. Guests will also get the chance to learn about beekeeping, container garden planting, as well as enjoy live music, food and a cash bar.

April 22, 10 a.m.-4 p.m., Boston Public Market, 100 Hanover St., bostonpublicmarket.org

"Get Down to Earth" Brunch
Head to Lord Hobo Beer Bar in Cambridge on Sunday for a science-filled brunch in honor of Earth Day. Scientists and research groups from around the area will be in attendance to talk about what's going on in the world of environmental science and the challenges they face while guests enjoy some great food and cocktails. The event is part of the nationwide Taste of Science festivities that are set to kick off this weekend.

April 22, noon-3 p.m., Lord Hobo Beer Bar, 92 Hampshire St., Cambridge, tasteofscience.org/boston-events/down-to-earth

Party for Planet Earth
Celebrate the holiday a day early with your little ones over at the Franklin Park Zoo's Party for Planet Earth. The zoo has a day of fun planned on Saturday, including meet and greets with Dr. Seuss' The Lorax as well as story times, in half hour intervals in the Nature's Neighborhoods Children's Zoo section. Attendees will also get the chance to meet zookeepers, take part in animal enrichment and hands-on activities, plus learn about ways to help the environment from local conservation group exhibitors.

April 21, 10 a.m.-3 p.m., Franklin Park Zoo, 1 Franklin Park Rd., zoonewengland.org/engage/party-for-the-planet

Community solar aims to bring renewable energy to everyone

For Earth Day, environmental activists are encouraging people to look into community solar projects, which gives the benefits of solar energy without solar panels on your own roof.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Anyone can go outside and enjoy the sun, but can everyone benefit from solar power?

If you don't have the finances, or the roof, to install solar panels, you may have thought you had to miss out on the renewable energy resource, but a movement of "community solar" has been gaining traction.

Community solar is a model that lets you get the benefits (economic and environmental) of solar panels, without installing them on your roof. The whole concept, said Nick Baudouin, co-founder of community solar software company PowerMarket, is "solar for all."

"It's for everyone, not just everyone who can check off a lot of boxes," like previous requirements of home ownership, an in-the-thousands installation payment, a credit check and so on, he said. "I live in a city, in an apartment, and clearly I can't put solar on my roof, but I can still be part of solar and be part of the sharing economy."

Instead of having panels right on your roof, you can basically rent panels in a nearby community solar farm and see the savings — in some cases, guaranteed amounts — in your energy bills. You don't have to commit to 20 years of solar service or deal with the hassle of installing panels.

PowerMarket works with solar developers to establish community solar programs, handling the software that deals with the utility companies, the households, making sure the credit goes toward the energy bills and so on. There's a lot of administration work to it, he said, but it's worth it to make solar more accessible.

"I live in a city, in an apartment, and clearly I can't put solar on my roof, but I can still be part of solar and be part of the sharing economy."
Nick Baudouin

Community solar farms let you get the benefits of solar power without putting panels on your own roof. WIKIMEDIA COMMONS

Currently, PowerMarket has about seven community solar projects in both New York and Massachusetts. Some are still looking for people to sign on, like a project in Palmer that will provide a carbon trade-off equivalent to planting 372 trees a year, while others are mostly booked up and awaiting construction, like a rooftop solar farm for Queens.

John Oppermann, executive director of Earth Day Initiative, an environmental nonprofit that partnered with PowerMarket to get people to sign up to the Queens project, said he definitely sees community solar becoming (even more) popular.

"Think across the country, people are looking to whatever ways they can switch over to solar and wind," he said. It's a great option particularly for cities like New York and Boston, which he said are "high ambition, low ability" when it comes to renewable energy. Community solar, he added, "provides the missing link."

OP-ED: CELEBRATING EARTH DAY 2018 IN BOSTON

OPINION

MAYOR WALSH

For Earth Day on April 22, Boston Mayor Marty Walsh talks about the efforts Boston is making to improve the environment, and what you can do to help.

Mayor Walsh. GETTY IMAGES

Boston Mayor Marty Walsh has undertaken initiatives that aim to improve the environment and reduce waste. PROVIDED

Here in Boston, we pride ourselves on our open spaces, parks and beautiful waterfronts. From places to sit in the sun, to the views of Boston Harbor, to the grassy areas for communities to gather, our environment provides us with the spaces that increase our quality of life. As we celebrate Earth Day on Sunday, April 22, it's important to remember the responsibility we have — as a city, country, and world — to ensure a safe, healthy, sustainable environment for generations to come.

The City of Boston is taking bold action on improving the environment and climate. Our award-winning Climate Action Plan serves as Boston's roadmap for reaching its goals of reducing carbon emissions, preparing for the impacts of climate change, and reducing waste.

Climate Ready Boston is taking action now to prevent near- and long-term coastal flooding and exploring how we deal with extreme heat. We've completed in-depth planning in East Boston and Charlestown to protect vulnerable areas from a rise in sea level and are working on designs now to protect against flooding in South Boston.

Zero Waste Boston aims to encourage the city, its residents and businesses to waste less, and recycle more, creating more opportunities for reusing materials, and composting organic waste. Taking these steps will not only help the environment, it will save money and create new, local green jobs.

Carbon Free Boston is an initiative that is weighing the costs and benefits of technologies and policies across key action areas including electric power, buildings, transportation, and waste to reduce carbon in our environment.

So how can you do your part in creating a greener and brighter future for Boston?

Recycle and reduce waste: In Boston, we collect recycling each week with your trash pick-up. We picked up over 50,000 tons of recycling alone! Recycle what you can and make a conscious effort to reduce waste in your home.

Save energy: Lower your heat when you leave your home, change your light bulbs to make them energy efficient, and unplug small appliances when you aren't using them. Renew Boston is our go-to program for residents interested in saving energy, money, and improving home comfort. More than 40,000 Bostonians have signed up for a home energy visit. Visit Renew Boston online to learn more and work with us to lower your utility bills and do your part to reduce carbon emissions citywide.

Organize a neighborhood cleanup: Take advantage of the (potentially) nice weather this weekend, gather your friends, and clean up trash in your local parks and open spaces. It's a great opportunity to get outside and help the planet at the same time!

I'm proud that Boston is leading the way on climate and the environment. In everything we do, our people are our greatest assets; and I hope that we together will build a healthy, thriving city for future generations.

Talking pot with Tommy Chong

Tommy Chong comes clean about the "Up in Smoke" 40th anniversary," if we'll see a new Cheech & Chong movie, his favorite strain and more, man.

NIKKI M. MASCALI
nikki.mascali@metro.us

Cheech & Chong's cult classic "Up in Smoke" turns 40 this year. NEIL VISEL

Tommy Chong has been "America's sweetheart of cannabis" and stoners everywhere since forming the Cheech & Chong comedy duo with Richard "Cheech" Marin back in the '70s, but it was the release of their first film, "Up in Smoke," that gave Cheech & Chong cult status.

"Up in Smoke" turns 40 this year, and if you find that hard to believe, imagine how Chong himself feels.

"Back then, we weren't really planning on living this long, so everything that's been happening for the past 20 years has been a big surprise to both of us," he told Metro with a laugh.

In honor of the anniversary, a deluxe collector's edition of "Up in Smoke" is being released, fittingly, on 4/20, which includes a newly recorded version of the title song, rolling papers, a film poster, booklet with new essays by Cheech & Chong and rare, unseen photos and more. Plus, the duo has a few select comedy concert dates, including at The Capitol Theatre in Port Chester, New York, on Friday and the SugarHouse Casino in Philadelphia on May 5.

Cheech & Chong comedy duo with Richard "Cheech" Marin

Tommy Chong NEIL VISEL

When was the last time you watched "Up in Smoke?"
About a year ago, I was at the Mammoth Film Festival, and they played "Up In Smoke," and I watched it and really enjoyed it. It's a very good movie.

There are lots of goodies in the collector's edition. What's your favorite?
Anything smokable — that's in the VIP package and only the actors can have that. But I like all the stuff; it's a fun grab bag of gifts.

What can fans expect from the "Up in Smoke" live shows?
They can expect everything, and we give them everything, the full Monty, as they say, so that's what they can expect — a full Monty of Cheech & Chong bits.

You guys really introduced stoner culture to the masses, but do you miss when marijuana wasn't so mainstream?
You know, I've never been judgmental, and as a result, I enjoy everything. When I was in jail, I enjoyed it, so I enjoy myself wherever I'm at, so no, I don't miss those days at all.

Are you surprised so many states have legalized marijuana in some capacity?
Not really. I've known about this secret. Weed was legal before the Puritans took charge, and now it's really going back to what it was before, but we're going forward with the product itself. The entire world is slowly becoming really stoned, and we do need it for sure.

Do you think there's a downside to legalization?
What's the worst that can happen? The worst is happening, there's a glut of weed on the market. Too much weed, oh my God, what are we going to do? Start smoking it! Get Cheech & Chong in here, we've got too much weed in the country!

Will we ever see a new Cheech & Chong movie?
You're going to get the anniversary of "Up in Smoke," which is much better. That's one of the reasons Cheech and I decided not to do another movie. We really can't compete with what we've already done.

What advice would you give to parents whose kids become interested in pot?
If you're going to steal your parents dope, replace it — and make sure you give them better than what you took. It's only polite.

Tommy Chong answers 5 blazing questions

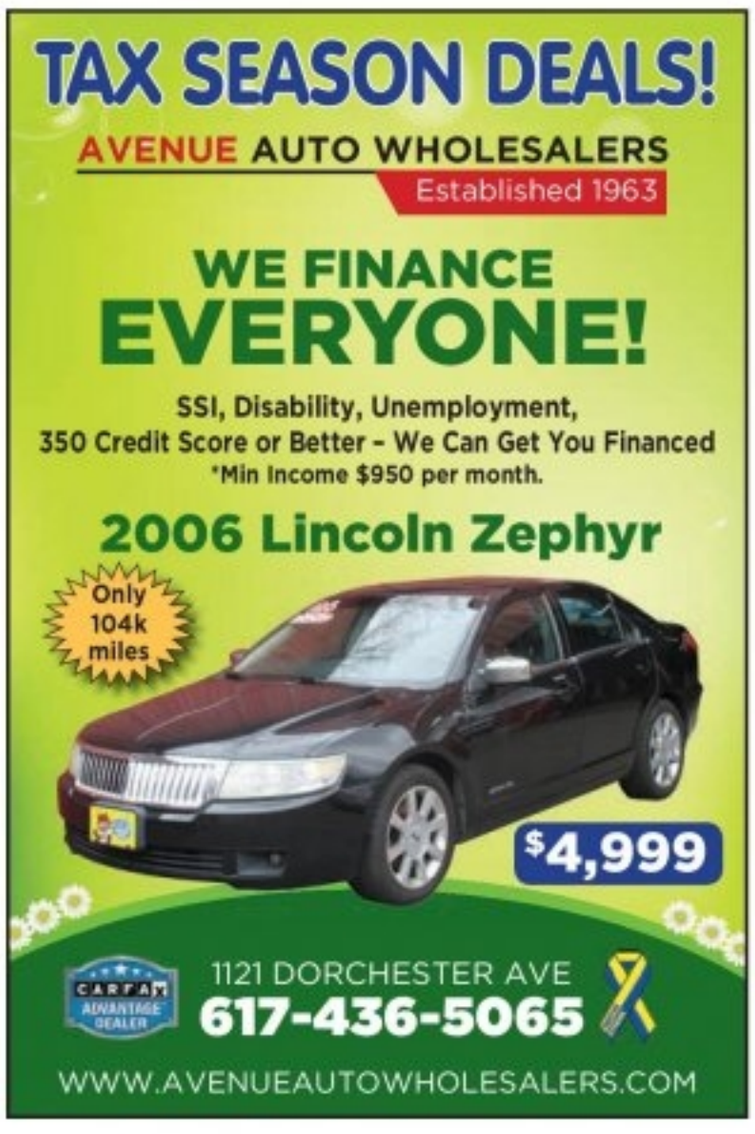
Favorite marijuana strain? "Chong's Choice. It's a collection of all the good strains put into one joint."

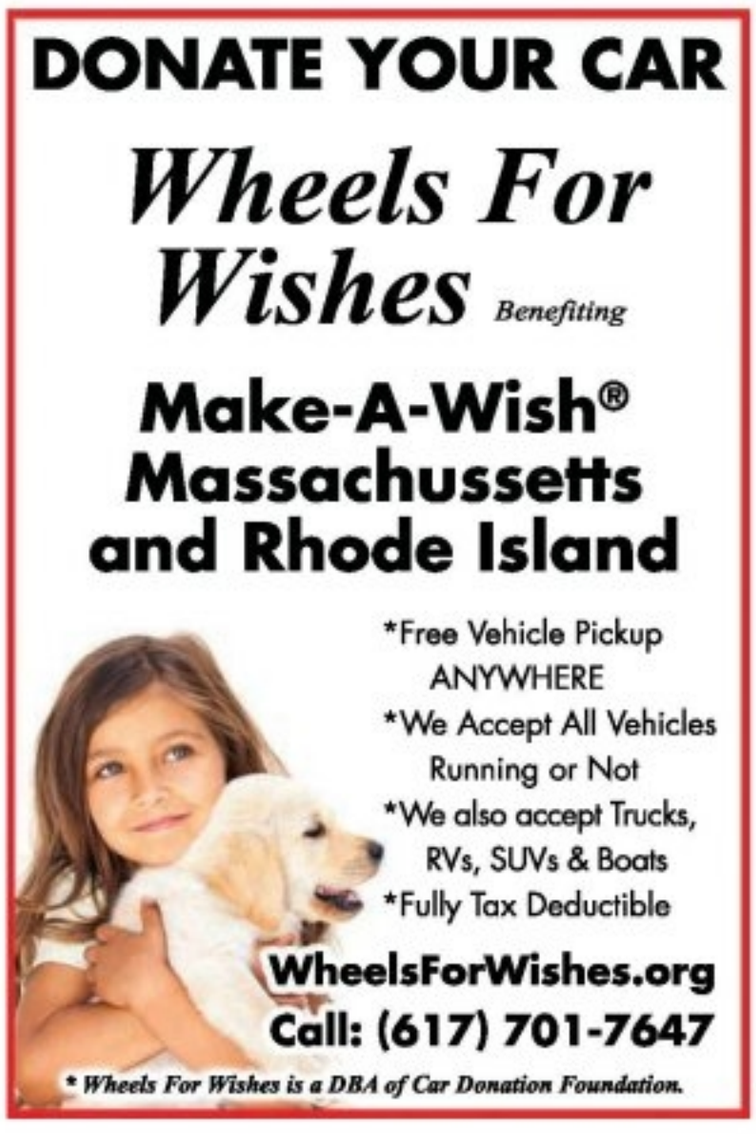
Favorite method to imbibe? "Chong Bong."

Favorite nickname for marijuana? "God."

Favorite munchie? "Celery sticks and almond butter."

Person in Trump administration you'd like to get high with? "She's gone, though, but Hope Hicks. I admire Trump's taste — he does know how to pick beautiful women, but he does have a hard time paying them."





Southwest focuses on older engines in probe of deadly jet explosion

Passengers described scenes of panic as a piece of shrapnel from a Southwest jet engine shattered one of the aircraft's windows. GETTY IMAGES

The wrecked engine of a Southwest Airlines jet was being examined on Wednesday by safety officials investigating why it blew up in mid air, killing a passenger in the country's first deadly airline accident in nine years.

The engine exploded over Pennsylvania about 20 minutes after the Dallas-bound Southwest Flight 1380 left New York's LaGuardia Airport with 149 people on board, sending pieces of shrapnel into the plane. Bank executive Jennifer Riordan, 43, was killed and another passenger was nearly sucked through a shattered window near the plane's left wing.

Southwest crews were inspecting similar engines the airline had in service, focusing on the 400 to 600 oldest of the CFM56 engines, made by a partnership of France's Safran and General Electric, according to a person with knowledge of the situation. It was the second time that style of engine had failed on a Southwest jet in the past two years, prompting airlines around the world to step up inspections.

A National Transportation Safety Board inspection crew was combing over the Boeing 737-700 for signs of what caused the engine to explode.

Passengers described scenes of panic as a piece of shrapnel from the engine shattered a window on the aircraft, almost sucking a female passenger out. Witnesses speaking with U.S. media identified Riordan as the passenger nearly sucked out the window.

Videos posted on social media showed passengers grabbing for oxygen masks and screaming as the plane, piloted by 56-year-old Tammie Jo Shults, a former fighter pilot for the U.S. Navy, prepared for its descent into Philadelphia.

Southwest Airlines experienced an unrelated safety incident early on Wednesday when a Phoenix-bound flight was forced to land at Nashville airport shortly after take-off because of bird strike.

The airline expected to wrap up its inspection of the engines it was targeting in about 30 days. REUTERS

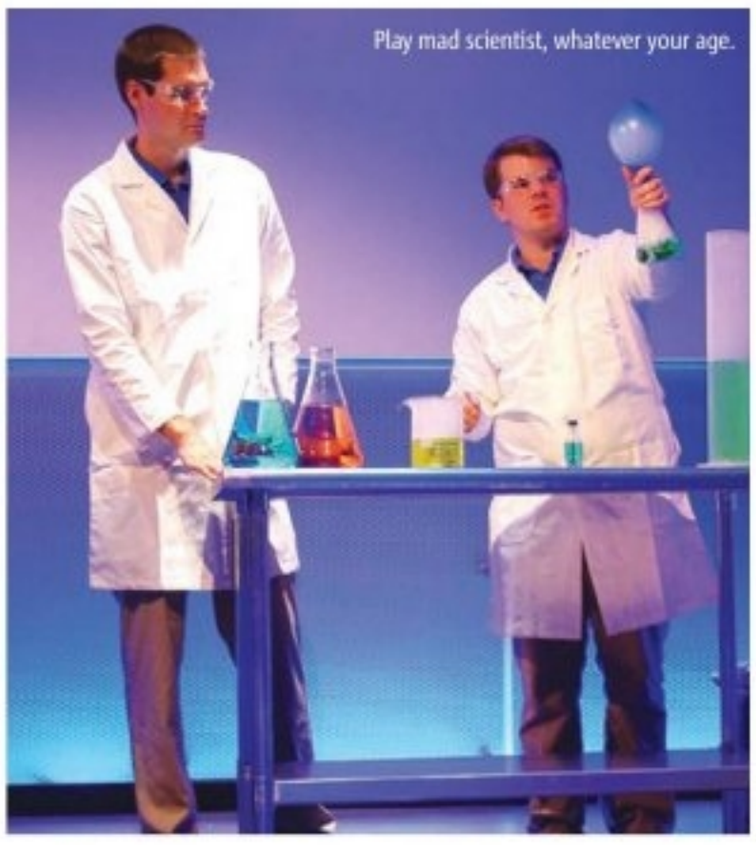
Stay on the water, but there's more to this place than just the beach. ALL IMAGES PROVIDED



Play mad scientist, whatever your age.

The Palm Beaches: Where families find fun

You might not think of this part of Florida for a trip with the kids, but you definitely should. RICHARD SILVERSTEIN

Few kids are content with a traditional beach break. You know, lazy days napping in the sand underneath a magazine. They need activities, and hopefully ones that you'll enjoy as well. An expensive theme park isn't your only option, either — here are some awesome ways to spend a holiday with the little ones in the Palm Beaches of Florida.

But first, a bit about the area. The Palm Beaches stretch for 47 miles along the Florida coast and include a network of beach towns including West Palm, Palm Beach Gardens, Boca Raton and more. All are easily accessible from Palm Beach International Airport, a direct flight away.

Now, onto the fun.

Museum of Discovery & Science

You'll excuse the adults who show up sans kids to experience the Museum of Discovery & Science (mods.org) — this place is engaging regardless of your age (and is a great diversion if you encounter a rainy day and still want to feel beachy vibes as you follow the "Florida Water Story" or, alternatively, hurricane force winds in a simulator).

Take the opportunity to report on the weather at the Storm Center, and make your own clouds. Not enough time to make it to the Everglades this trip? They feature a virtual reality boat tour that brings the region to life in a fun way. And if your family's animal obsessed every box is ticked — turtles, bats, snakes, tiny gators, adorable otters and sharks are all on display, and some even tour the floor so you can interact with them.

Did we mention the flight simulator? And the largest IMAX theater in this part of the state? They've got those, too. All in a family-friendly environment where you can let the little ones loose to explore, play and learn.

Where to eat

We say that kids are "picky eaters," but adults can be just as particular. If your family's got differing tastes so are best catered to by a wide range of options, stop by Ichiyami Buffet and Sushi in Boca Raton (ichiyamisushi.com). They've got over 200 items, and though they specialize in all-things-Asian there's something for everyone, and for an all-you-care-to-eat experience the price is a total steal.

Looking to get your hands dirty? Mississippi Sweets (also in Boca Raton, mississippisweets-bbq.com) will leave your lot with sticky fingers and full bellies of BBQ, wings, waffle fries and other southern staples. And there's sweet tea for the tots, and Mississippi Mud beer for the big kids (over 21, that is!).

And now it's finally nap time.

Where to stay

Waterstone Resort & Marina Boca Raton (waterstoneboca.com) is one of the top-rated properties in town. It capitalizes on it's waterfront — think rentals of stand-up paddle boards and jet skis, sunset catamaran trips, family cabanas, fishing charters, and shuttles to and from a nearby beach for snorkeling adventures — and is both kid and canine-friendly (just be sure to call it a "support animal" to get your fur friend on the plane!).

Shark Week every week

The "Otters at Play" exhibit

The Museum of Discovery & Science has been open since 1976, but is thoroughly cutting-edge.

Enjoy a moment of sunshine.

In Florida, even winter is packed full of moments of sunshine. With 825 miles of beaches, waterfront dining and exciting night life, the Sunshine State is your perfect escape.

Roadtripping Croatia

Yes, "Game of Thrones" put it on the map, but there's plenty more to discover on a road trip along this beautiful European coastal nation.

Fodor's Travel

"Game of Thrones" may have put Dubrovnik on the world's tourism agenda, but Croatia has been building up its tourism infrastructure for years. Chief among the improvements is the country's highway system — most of the freeways have been constructed within the last 15 years. And with the country's population of only 4 million, they're practically empty of drivers. Because of this, road-tripping is one of the best ways to wander this stunning land.

We've put together this seven-day itinerary to explore some of Croatia's most beautiful spots, eat its best food, and drink its best drink from the Dalmatian Coast all the way along the Istrian Peninsula.

Day 1

Let's be brutally honest about Dubrovnik: It's a total tourist trap. But while exploring the narrow side alleys with steep stairs and dark passages, it's still possible to be swept into history and occasionally stumble upon some actual locals.

Croatia has three Michelin-starred restaurants and one of them is in Dubrovnik. Set atop the city's defensive Wall, Restaurant 360 has an impeccable view. For a drink with actual locals, head to Caffe Bar Libertina.

Day 2

Head to Dubrovnik's ancient Wall and walk the whole 1-plus miles. It can become annoyingly crowded, especially when trying to climb into a tower, so it's best to arrive early.

Various passageways will lead you from the city toward the cliffs that overlook the Adriatic. But here's what's so wonderful about these gorgeous perches: They're bars! Head to either (or both) Buza and Cafe Bar Bard for some, or many, drinks. For the adventurous (and not drunk), jump into the sea and go for a swim.

The Plitvice Lakes National Park is off-the-beaten-path amazing. GETTY

Now, temper your hungry belly with an Asian-fusion feast at Azur. Yes, eat Asian-fusion in Dubrovnik. Here's why: Azur is off the beaten path and the food is quite good.

Day 3

It takes roughly three hours to drive to Split. For those who are fans of scheming, stop at the Trsteno Arboretum along the way, just 30 minutes outside of Dubrovnik. These gardens double as those in King's Landing. Then, carry on to Split.

Welcome to this weird town. Pass the Communist-era architecture and keep driving to the sea. Leave the car at the hotel and enter Diocletian's Palace.

Versailles this is not. Don't think of it as a museum, but as a district. Built by the Roman emperor Diocletian, it has simultaneously decayed and evolved in the millennia since construction into a thriving area of music and food. For a seafood feast, head to Nostromo inside the palace.

For a digestive, hang out with tourists at Bar Luxor. Really. Sit outside in the main square of the Palace, in the shadow of the cathedral of St. Domnius and have a drink. The setting is pure magic.

VISITFLORIDA.COM

Drive to Hvar, but avoid the drunks.
HOLLY ROGERS

Day 4

Pack a lunch and get ready to head up Marjan Hill. Considered the "lungs of the city," this verdant Wonderland has a two-hour hiking trail punctuated by a stunning lookout vista. Afterward, head to Kasjuni Beach and bathe in the Adriatic.

Upon returning to the city proper, pull up a chair at Uje Oil Bar for dinner, known for its wide selection of locally-sourced Dalmatian cuisine.

Day 5

It's recommended to rent a car with side sensors to maneuver onto the ferry to Hvar for the two-hour journey to the port of Stari Grad. Once on the island, you'll drive across it to the city of Hvar proper.

Be warned that during the high season from June through August, Hvar becomes a playground of champagne-chugging, EDM-listening naughty yachties. The rest of the year allows you to stroll the main promenade, the Riva, and take in the beauty, grab a bite to eat at one of the many outdoor dining cafes.

Afterward, head over to Hula Hula Bar, though not for eating. It's right on the water — you're certain to get wet if the surf is rough — and the drinks are strong. If you've got water shoes — the shore is stony — consider taking a dip.

For dinner, definitely go to Dalmatino, which is certainly the best restaurant on the island. The ingredients are exquisite and the entrees are surprisingly inexpensive.

Day 6

This day is about the journey, so buckle up. Get on that Jadrolinja ferry back to Split. Two hours later, drive to Plitvice Lakes, which will take almost three hours. Much of the stretch will not be along the new and glistening highways, but two-lane country roads.

Plitvice Lakes is an awe-inspiring national park. Even those who prefer exploring cities rather than subjecting themselves to nature will find their jaws regularly dropping. But, there's a big downside — the hotels were built under Communism and are all hideous. It's recommended that you grin and bear the Hotel Jezero.

Before settling in, take a side trip to Bosnia. The border is only 5 miles away but the food is infinitely better. Head to the town of Bihac, following the bends of the Una River to Restaurant Kostelski Buk. Do not leave here without eating the polenta.

Day 7

A three-hour drive will get you to Rovinj — but why there, you say, over other small, beautiful coastal cities throughout Croatia like Pula or Porec or Rijeka? It's simple: food. Monte is the real deal.

Beyond Monte, Rovinj is a charming Istrian fishing village. Its fields are a maze of vineyards, producing impeccable wines. There are enclaves of artists and galleries, with one of the best hotels in all of Europe: the Adriatic Hotel. It's elegant without aloofness, trendy without pompousness.

Seven days isn't really enough, but you'll get a good feel of this gloriously alluring country.

DRAWING LINES IN THE SAND, I'M ON TEAM BELICHICK

DANNY PICARD

Listen to "The Danny Picard Show" at dannypicard.com. Follow him on Twitter @dannypicard.

In case there was any confusion, I'm Team Belichick.

And as we get closer to Training Camp for the 2018 NFL season, I'm becoming more adamant than ever before that Bill Belichick needs to take his team back. I just never thought I'd be turning my back on Tom Brady and Rob Gronkowski in the process.

On second thought, who's turning their back on who here?

ESPN's Adam Schefter reported this week that Brady has not committed to playing in 2018. All the while, Gronkowski is reportedly still contemplating retirement.

Honestly, if you told me Vince McMahon was calling the shots right now in Foxboro, I'd believe you. This whole thing has a WWE feel to it. The storyline is wild. They're keeping us guessing. The build-up to this rivalry can only mean one thing: Brady and Gronkowski vs Belichick and Robert Kraft at WrestleMania 35 next year at MetLife Stadium, with Jimmy Garoppolo as the special guest referee.

Seriously though, I can't read this Schefter report on Brady's "commitment" to 2018 — or lack thereof — and not think of Hulk Hogan hitting Randy Savage with the leg drop heard 'round the world back in 1996 at "Bash at the Beach," to which, color commentator Bobby "The Brain" Heenan yelled, "Hulk Hogan has betrayed WCW!"

That was the night the nWo was formed and professional wrestling changed forever.

I get it, this is the NFL we're talking about, and Brady isn't about to storm into Belichick's office to spray paint "TB12" on his coach's back after he knocks him out cold. But I'll keep refreshing instagram just in case.

As I write this, Brady has not made an appearance at the Patriots' voluntary offseason workouts. Gronkowski has also been absent. And it all comes on the heels of now-former Patriot Danny Amendola crying to ESPN's Mike Reiss in the back seat of an Uber last weekend, calling out Belichick for not playing Malcolm Butler in the Super Bowl and for not wanting to pay his players.

I say "crying" because that's what it was. I understand his frustrations on Butler being benched, but at some point, we all need to just move on.

Amendola is only upset because he knows he's replaceable. That was never more evident than when he signed a two-year, $12 million deal with the Miami Dolphins in March. The Patriots wouldn't match that contract, because, again, he's replaceable. And I got news for him, so is Butler.

People forget that Belichick picked Butler up off the street, as an undrafted free agent. Without an opportunity in New England, the NFL world might not even know who Butler is.

Replaceable.

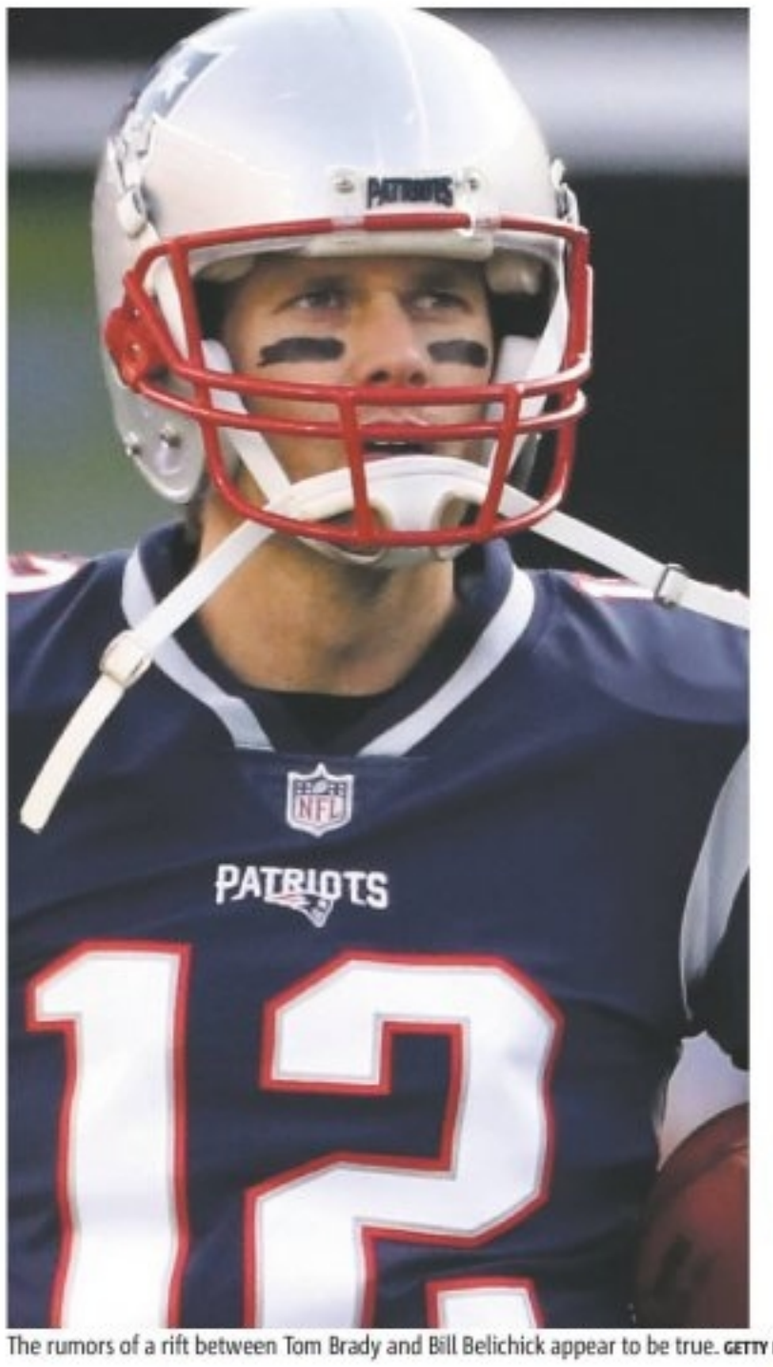
But then there's Brady and Gronkowski. I don't consider them to be just any old spokes on the wheel. They help keep the machine running. Brady more so than Gronkowski, because after all, the Patriots did win a Super Bowl without Gronkowski two years ago.

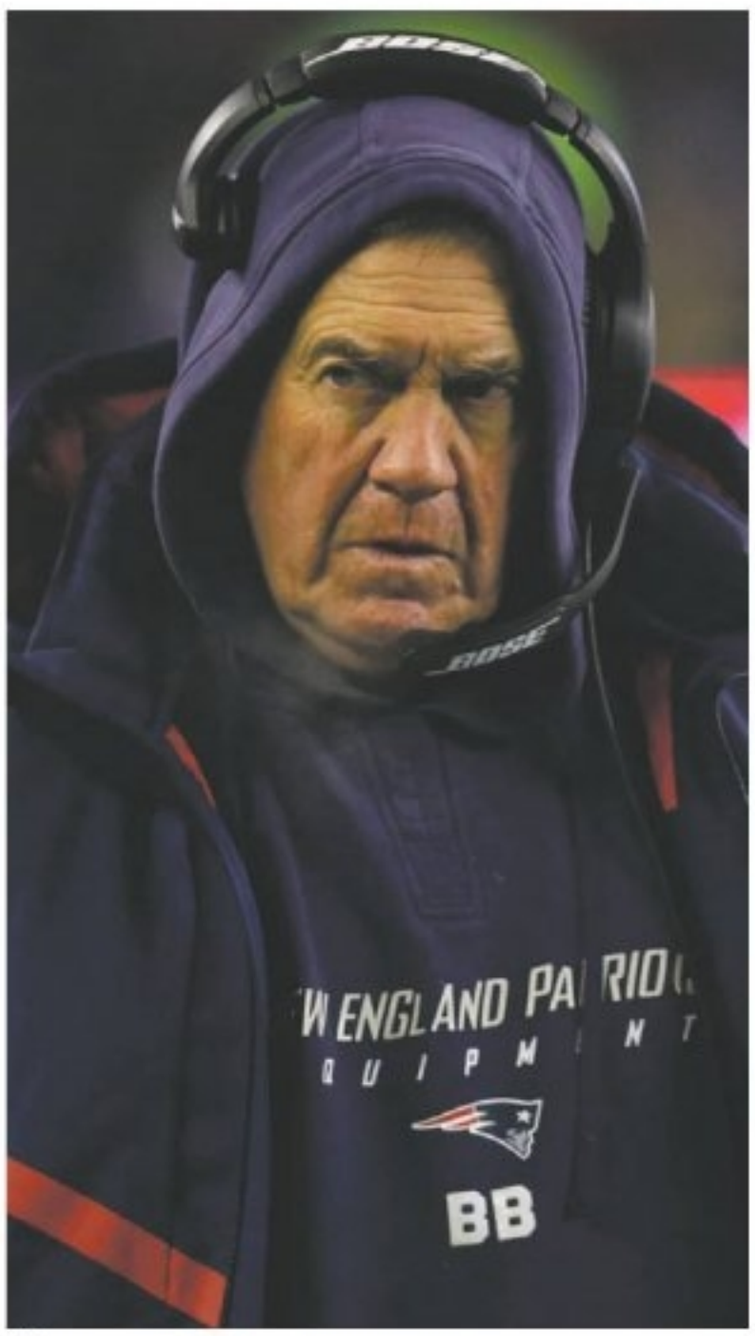
Both Brady and Gronkowski are under contract, so verbal "commitments" shouldn't be necessary. But these reports are only coming out because the players are obviously making sure this "news" is leaked. And it's clear that Brady and Gronkowski would like Belichick to suddenly alter the way he handles business and submit to their personal demands.

To that, I say, enough is enough. You're either committed or you're not. The Patriot Way is about much more than on-field production. But now, two of the organization's greatest players who have thrived under that Patriot Way are ignoring the sign on the wall at Gillette Stadium which reads, "If you don't want to be here, you don't have to be."

And to be clear, I'm not asking Belichick to take that sign down. I'm demanding that he buy a bigger frame.

Listen to "The Danny Picard Show" at dannypicard.com. Follow him on Twitter @DannyPicard.





The rumors of a rift between Tom Brady and Bill Belichick appear to be true. GETTY IMAGES

Will Brady play?

Tom Brady has not yet said if he will play in 2018 or not, and is skipping the Patriots' voluntary workouts this week. But Brady does have plans to do football-related activities in the near future, according to Pro Football Talk's Mike Florio. Florio wrote this week, "Per a source with knowledge of the situation, Brady has already made arrangements to get together with some of his teammates between the end of the offseason program and the start of training camp in order to better prepare for the season to come."

Resiliency a staple of 2017-18 B's

Bruins have responded well to being punched in the mouth.

RICH SLATE
sports@metro.us

Patrice Bergeron and the Bruins will face the Maple Leafs in Game 4 Thursday night in Toronto. GETTY IMAGES

Few expected this to be a quick series, so it was a bit shocking when Boston beat Toronto so handily in the first two games at TD Garden (5-1 in Game 1 and 7-3 in Game 2) last week.

Playing in a near-must-win situation, the Maple Leafs responded with a much better team-wide effort in Game 3 on Monday at Air Canada Centre, a 4-2 victory to cut Boston's series lead to 2-1. With an extra day off before Game 4 on Thursday (7, NESN), expect another entertaining tilt that could ultimately shift this matchup in a big way.

The stakes couldn't be much higher for both teams as the Bruins go for the split in Canada with the chance to return to TD Garden on Saturday night (8, NBC) hoping to have the Maple Leafs on the brink of elimination. Meanwhile, if Toronto can hold serve at home it would tie things up to make it a best-of-three series.

Toronto's offense utilized numerous stretch passes in Game 3 to wake up their dormant offense. The Maple Leafs scored first (for the first time in the series) on a power-play goal by James van Riemsdyk. Later, young superstar Auston Matthews got his first point of the series on a beautiful goal and veteran Patrick Marleau's pair of tallies were his first of the series.

"If we're just aware of who's behind us, it's part of their game," noted Bruins defenseman Torey Krug. "They like to spring guys, get them going and let those young, talented guys do the work."

Besides those forwards finally showing up, the other headline for Toronto was the play of goaltender Frederik Andersen (40 saves), who had been pulled in Game 2 after allowing three goals on just five shots. Boston peppered him (42-30 shots on goal for the game), especially over the last two periods where they fired a combined 34 shots to 18 for the Maple Leafs. His desperation paddle save on David Pastrnak (4 goals, 5 assists) in the third period was one of the best that you'll ever see.

Of course, you have to also acknowledge that the Bruins just didn't shoot very accurately as they hit three posts in Game 3. After rolling to 12 goals in the first two games, the B's were due for a hiccup offensively. Pastrnak, Patrice Bergeron and Brad Marchand were a combined minus-7 on Monday after they had 20 points over Games 1 and 2.

Penalties are usually few and far between in the postseason, but the Bruins' power play was downright explosive in the first two contests (3-for-6 in Game 1 and 2-for-4 in Game 2). Another difference in Game 3 is that the Leafs converted on their lone power-play opportunity while the Bruins did not. All season long, Boston has bounced back from tough losses and adversity. We'll have to see if that same script is followed in these playoffs.

I have lupus. Every day is different.

Battling Lupus is painful, exhausting, and can sometimes make you feel hopeless. You may have been able to do more yesterday because you didn't feel as sick as you do today.

The LILAC study is an investigational, two-part study for people with lupus erythematosus. You are being asked to consider participating in Part A of the LILAC study. Part A will evaluate the potential efficacy of an investigational medication, called BIIB059, in reducing skin disease in people with systemic lupus erythematosus (SLE) with skin activity or lupus rash. The study will also determine if your SLE disease activity is improving.

You may be able to participate in Part A of the LILAC study if you:

- Are between 18 and 75 years of age
- Have a confirmed diagnosis of SLE
- Have active skin disease caused by SLE

Other eligibility criteria may also apply. If you qualify for the study, your participation will last approximately 40 weeks and include up to 13 visits to the study site.

Aries There are no shortcuts if you want to get things done right the first time. Size up your workload and manage your time with precision and firmness.

Taurus An opportunity will intrigue you. Consider the pros and cons and what it will take to initiate a positive change. Trust and believe in yourself, and present what you have to offer.

Gemini It's important to keep your story straight. If you exaggerate or lead someone to believe you are willing to do something you are not, you will end up looking bad.

Cancer Know what you want, and don't let anyone manipulate you or put you on the spot. Control the situation instead of letting it control you.

Leo Don't expect to get the best price or be told the truth when someone is asking for your help. Your generosity will be taken advantage of if you are gullible.

Virgo A sensitive situation surrounding a partner must be addressed diplomatically. Look for the perfect moment to make your point without hurting someone's feelings.

Libra Don't trust what others tell you. Get firsthand information and don't make changes that can disrupt important relationships. Take your time and only pursue what's feasible.

Scorpio A change may appear to be favorable, but go over the fine print before you take part. Play it safe and get what you want in writing before you proceed.

Sagittarius Make plans to enjoy downtime with a loved one. Spending time together will help you iron out any conflicts you may have with each other.

Capricorn You'll have to ask direct questions if you want to hear the truth. Someone will distort a message or mislead you. Being together with someone isn't recommended.

Aquarius Stick close to home and iron out any difficulties or changes you want to make. Discussions will lead to solutions and positive changes that put your mind at ease.

Pisces Don't be too trusting. Someone will exaggerate or offer a false impression regarding a deal or purchase that he or she wants you to buy into. EUGENIA LAST
